BAD BREATH

SYMPTOMS

Bad breath, or halitosis, can come from:

- Gingivitis
- Mouth Inflammation
- Abscessed or decaying teeth
- Internal Diseases (i.e. kidney disease or diabetes)

It can be apparent when you're close to the animal's mouth but may also be smelled from a distance.

Symptoms of bad breath may include:

- Tartar build up or redness in the gum line
- Blood or increased saliva in the mouth
- Increase in your pet's fluid intake

CAUSE

A weakened immune system can cause gingivitis, resulting in bad breath.

The body allows bacteria to enter through the gums. If this is not treated, the gingivitis will gradually worsen and tartar accumulation will trap bacteria in a biofilm. The result is significantly impaired oral health.

Poor oral hygiene will worsen with poor foods, especially with high levels of sugar. Sugar allows bacteria to flourish within the mouth.

HOW TO HEAL NATURALLY

You can treat bad breath, and other oral hygiene conditions with quality, wholesome foods. You may also add any of the following supplements to a good diet:

- Probiotic (i.e. Acidophilus)
- Digestive enzymes
- Antioxidants like Vitamin C, Grape seed extract, and Hawthorne

Herbs that can aid with bad breath include:

- Astragalus
- Echinacea
- Goldenseal
- Cat's Claw

You can also provide your pet with chewing activities, such as bones, that will help clean their teeth and improve overall oral hygiene.

BONES & JOINTS

SYMPTOMS

For animals mobility means survival. Their aim is for painless movement and the freedom to run and play.

Symptoms of impaired mobility include:

- Limping
- Reduced activity
- Muscle wasting

CAUSE

Oftentimes, bone and joint problems come from the build-up of boney material around the joint surface. This is why movement can cause pain.

Impaired mobility and arthritis can be caused by:

- Injury
- Excessive activity
- Depleted nutrition
- Genetic factors

HOW TO HEAL NATURALLY

Nutrition is medicine. For this reason I believe that a wholesome diet is the key for a healthy pet. You can supplement a good diet with large doses of:

- Vitamin C
- Coenzyme Q10
- Glucosamine

CANCER

SYMPTOMS

Cancer develops when abnormal cells divide uncontrollably and are able to invade other tissues. These cells can spread throughout the body and into the blood and lymph.

There are more than 100 different types of cancer. Most are named for the organ or type of cell in which they start in. Cancer can appear as a visible mass with ulceration or hair, or it can be internal with no apparent signs.

Depending on the type and location of the cancer, it can be a very painful disease.

There can be various causes of cancer, some including:

- Sensitivity to various chemicals
- Vaccines
- Environmental factors

CAUSE

HOW TO HEAL NATURALLY

There is no cure for cancer, but we can try our best to prevent it and to support the healing process.

Just like our own immune system, our pet's immune system protects the cells from abnormal growth. When immune defenses are down, cells can be left unprotected and abnormally grow, while also invading other tissues.

Nutrition is the key to providing antioxidants and flavonoids that can protect against cancer.

In addition to a good diet, I would recommend the following herbs for cancer prevention:

- Devil's claw
- Ginseng
- Grape seed extract
- Burdock root
- Slippery elm bark
- Pau d'Arco

If your pet has cancer and is undergoing treatment, consult your naturopathic veterinarian about herbal support to ensure it will support their current treatment plan.

- Coughing
- Watery eyes
- Watery discharge from the nose

CAUSE

The cold and flu come from viral infections that attack the lining of the respiratory tract.

HOW TO HEAL NATURALLY

Your pet's body will naturally respond to fight off the infection. But you can provide some help in fighting the virus too.

Begin with providing your pet with wholesome nutrition that will support the immune system. When nutrition is intact, support the immune system by supplementing with herbs like:

PAW HEALTH

SYMPTOMS

Cracked paws, infections & cysts can affect your pet's paw health.

If you notice that your pet is limping or is reluctant to walk, they might have cracked paws.

If your pet licks their paws often, or shows signs of their paws being itchy, they might have an infection. Infections often come from:

- Allergies
- Bacteria
- Yeast

Cysts also form in between the toes. They are small lumps which contain sebaceous material and they rupture can become swollen and inflamed.

CAUSE

Paw health can be compromised for a variety of reasons, including:

- Long walks on rough and uneven surfaces
- Allergies
- Skin glands are blocked

HOW TO HEAL NATURALLY

With paw conditions, it helps to provide extra essential oils in the diet, like Lavender or Rose. You may also want to consider having your pet's allergies tested, in order to avoid foods that may cause a paw infection.

Again, a wholesome diet is always key in improving your pet's health.

Periodontal conditions, meaning conditions located around the tooth, first appear as gingivitis. There will also be a build up of plaque, which is a combination of bacteria and food that eventually forms tartar.

Once gingivitis and tartar are present, the gums become inflamed and separate from the teeth. This can make the teeth loose, and may eventually fall out.

CAUSE

The main causes of periodontal conditions are:

- Poor diet
- Poor dental hygiene

HOW TO HEAL NATURALLY

Herbs and supplements can heal and soothe the gum inflammation. Some supplements to try include:

- Coenzyme Q10

Irritable bowel syndrome (IBS) is often characterized by:

- Abdominal pain
- Altered bowel function (diarrhea or constipation)
- Flatulence
- Nausea

As our pet's age, the amount of digestive enzymes that are released by the body can increase or decrease. A fluctuation in digestive enzymes can affect overall digestive health.

Diarrhea is often self limiting. At first no food should be eaten, instead fluids should be freely consumed, particularly broths. Herbs can be used to help heal the gut lining and reduce infections in the gut.

- High fiber foods (i.e. pumpkin)
- Increase liquid intake

SYMPTOMS

Toxic substances are everywhere – air, food, and in water. Even our bodies and the bacteria in the intestines produce toxic substances.

Long term health of the animal is largely dependent on the body's ability to detoxify.

There are many diseases and symptoms associated with various pollutants.

CAUSE

Animals are often fed a lot of processed, low grade meats and grains. There are usually additives, made from chemicals, also present in their foods, and accordingly, build up in their bodies.

The body's organs must remove the toxins before cellular damage can occur. The organs involved in this detox are the:

- Liver
- Kidneys
- Lungs
- Bowels

A high level or continued exposure to toxins will weaken the immune system.
